

The Trey O'Hearts

Romantic Tales by Louis Joseph Vance.

Copyright, 1914, by Louis Joseph Vance.

SYNOPSIS

By arrangement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it is possible to see "The Trey O'Hearts" in The Times Dispatch, and to do so to the great pleasure of the Superior Theatre. Synopsis: The story of hearts is the death of Alan Law, whose father was waged by him through his desire for Judith, against Alan Law, whose father, on the other hand, had made him a soldier, that made him a hero for the ladies, who loved him, but envied him, and pursued him impudently. After escaping death many times, the young man, Alan Law, has been brought home by his mother, Mrs. Alan, to New York in search of Judith. He meets her, and arranges an escape, but at the last moment substitutes himself for Boe, and Boe, thinking he has escaped, sees Judith, plans an immediate marriage. At this moment an emissary of Trine's discovery and sends him to Alan, and the told woman rushes away.

CHAPTER LII.—CHECKED.

"If you please, Alan begged, 'let me speak to Boe; at once. Forgive me."

Reluctantly the minister surrendered the telephone.

"That you, Boe?"

"Alan. Please say so, what are you doing over there? Is Miss Trine with you?"

"No. What about Boe?"

Alan demurred, stammering with anxiety.

"Why—none of my spies has just reported by telephone. He was going on duty this morning when he saw a young woman—either Rose or Judith—wearing rough coat over boudoir dress—climb out of one of the basement windows of the house. She was apparently in great distress of mind and anxious to escape after being seen from the house, but before she had whose post of observation is in the third story of one of the houses opposite could get to the street, she had been caught by several rough-looking men, who rushed out of Trine's house, dragging the girl, and made off with her in a car bearing a New Jersey license number, and sending men to watch the Jersey ferris. Call me up in an hour."

Without a word of response, and without a word of apology to the Rev. Mr. Wright, Alan dropped the receiver, snatched up his hat, and fled that house like a man demented.

Alan, escaping from Trine's house, overpowered and made the captive of those lowest creatures—gummen posing as the stamp of that animal whom Trine had wedged with the assistance of Alan the night before.

There was neither a moment nor time for him to charter nor any time to waste in seeking one. Alan would only hope to find one on his way back toward the ferry. Finding his way more by instinct than otherwise—for he had no note of the route he had traveled to Princeton, he reached that counterfeiter's—Boggs' shop—and turned out to be his sister, Judith—who traversed a vast amount of strange territory, covering a distance far greater than he had imagined lay between the factory and the waterfront. It must have been an hour or two before he came into a street where recognized by its dinginess and squalor that in which he had thrown Matrophant from the running-board of the taxicab.

And there he lay paused, breathless and footsore, to cast about him for the way to the ferry, a tourist having turned at top speed and slowed to a stop before that self-same tenement house, whereupon he whose side-walk had seen Matrophant assisted by the batters of the taxicab.

The Chills is Only a Symptom.

The chill of pneumonia is perhaps the strongest prop of the catching cold delusion. An apparently healthy person is seized with a severe chill. From what? Well, he doesn't exactly know, but leaves it to him and his friends to find a suitable defect of weather to blame. But if we take the man's temperature in the midst of his chill we invariably find his internal temperature elevated above normal, equal as he thinks he is. This presence of fever during the chill proves to the physician that he has been deluded. The pneumonia seems to have a lurking in the lung some few hours prior to the beginning of the chill. Hence the accidental weather change or draft of air which has caused him to change his clothes or wrap up in a shawl.

The pattern will be mailed to any Department on receipt of price.

around us through dust accumulations are willing to take precautions. Even in taking precautions there is a danger. Never use lamps with dry clusters to stir up the dust. It merely settles down again and in the settling the dangerous germs are liable to land in the wrong place. A damp cloth should be used for dusting.

Remember: The only microbe is always ready for entertainment; don't be a foolish host.

Jane M.: It is not advisable to use olive oil on the face. It will cause a growth of hair. Olive oil is good for complexion or filling hollows, but the skin of the face is tender, and if there is the least tendency for a growth of the olive oil will increase the growth.

Unite: You are self-conscious that red when in company. Forget yourself when you are among people. Think of others. Learn to converse on current events, the latest books and plays. Don't think about your face at all.

Mary: Very often filled teeth become discolored. I am sorry, but I know nothing that will whiten them. You might inquire of your dentist. Perhaps he would advise you to have them straightened. Nothing is prettier than an even row of white teeth.

Nothing need spoil one's appearance more than crooked teeth. When the teeth can be easily straightened, I certainly would not advise you to have false teeth. You are still young and have time to become taller. I have known people who have become taller after their twentieth year. There is nothing that I know of that will make you taller.

A. P.: I know nothing about the article you mention. I cannot give advice on proprietary articles. Always massage the wrinkles in the opposite direction in which they run—that is, across the face or neck wrinkles. I will gladly send you a formula for an astringent lotion and dietary for reducing flesh if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

Gale: If your hair has been "banged" out of a good cut, rub vaseline into the root of the hair each night. Do not curl it with the curling iron; it stops the growth of short hairs. A good hair tonic might also be rubbed into the scalp. If you care for a formula for a good hair tonic send me a stamped, addressed envelope and I will gladly send it to you.

Dr. Brady's Health Talks
Why is a Chilly so Shivery?

A complainant individual who has just caught a cold from a careless or ignorant friend, or from anybody else—soon experiences a chilly sensation or an actual shivering chattering chill as one of the earliest symptoms. It matters little whether he is developing coryza (head "cold"), bronchitis, pleurisy, pneumonia, tonsilitis or rheumatism. The chill warns him, not that something unpleasant is going to happen if he does not take a bath and take a hot bath, but that something has already happened. He has become infected with germs handed him gratuitously by his loving friend.

Combinations of satin and lace are found in various of the latest dress frocks for misses and small women. Willow green and cream are the colors used for the satin and lace respectively, in this design. The tunic is of lace and there is a subtle softness about the sash as it is wound about the figure. The sash size requires 4 1/4 yards 45-inch charmeuse satin, with 2 yards of 36-inch lace required to make.

mane to Family
BY LILLIAN RUSSELL

The careless housekeeper is a menace to every member of the family. Enclosed under hook and corner becomes a favorite place for the lurking microbes that sickens and kills human beings. If the doctor tells us we have a few disease germs in our systems, we hasten to retreat and seek for some medicine to drive out the invaders, but consciously or unconsciously we court the acquaintance of thousands of these same microbes when we permit dust to accumulate in the home and office.

The kitchen is established as a place for the preparation of wholesome food to give us nourishment and strength. It serves its purpose only when it is kept clean. Otherwise the food it produces to nourish us may be deadly poison.

Minnesota inquires: Would it be wise for a man of seventy-five to leave Minnesota and go West for the relief of dry eyes of the ear?

Reply—I can advise you that your grandfather, at least, was not guilty, as cataract is not hereditary. As for skin diseases, there is a pretty generous diagnosis, nevertheless, might advise you to apply the entire contents of the United States pharmacopoeia. Try a good doctor.

Miss A. C. asks: Is there any method for preventing the development of varicose veins when they have once started? Do you advise the wearing of elastic stockings?

Reply—Massage from toes toward heart. See to it that there is no pressure on veins in pelvis, from constipation, displacements, tumors or other interferences with return circulation. Avoid garters or tight bands of any kind. Practice deep breathing exercises and moderate room gymnastics daily. Avoid elastic stockings if possible. They do not improve matters.
